QA-589 Kirwan's Eareckson Farm 203 Deer Run Lane Stevensville vicinity, Queen Anne's County

Constructed circa 1860; expanded circa 1880 Private

Located on Batts Neck, on Kent Island, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm stands approximately three-and-one-third miles south of Stevensville. It faces north, a little over a third of a mile north-northwest from the intersection of Deer Run Lane and Batts Neck Road. The house appears to be a circa-1880, two-and-a-half-story, wood frame structure with a two-story, rear ell. Architectural and documentary details, however, indicate that a portion of the house may have been constructed circa 1850-1860. A non-historic ranch house, a non-historic garage, and a non-historic shed are located immediately to the west-northwest of the house; a historic, one-story, wood-frame, machine shed stands approximately thirty-five yards northeast.

Notwithstanding its state of disrepair, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm is a typical Queen Anne's County farmhouse from the second half of the nineteenth century, and it illustrates the prevalence of tenant farming in the county in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Occupied by a tenant farmer as early as 1860, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm continued to be used as a tenant farm through the early twentieth century. For most of the period between 1865 and 1930, half of more than half of the farmers in Queen Anne's County did not own the land they worked.

Summary

Located on Batts Neck, on Kent Island, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm stands approximately three-and-one-third miles south of Stevensville. It faces north, a little over a third of a mile north-northwest from the intersection of Deer Run Lane and Batts Neck Road. The house appears to be a circa-1880, two-and-a-half-story, wood frame structure with a two-story, rear ell. Architectural and documentary details, however, indicate that a portion of the house may have been constructed circa 1850-1860. A non-historic ranch house, a non-historic garage, and a non-historic shed are located immediately to the west-northwest of the house; a historic, one-story, wood-frame, machine shed stands approximately thirty-five yards northeast.

Description

Primary Resource

The house at Kirwan's Eareckson Farm sits on a level, grassy, 13.73-acre lot. Deer Run Lane, a gravel-paved road, runs north from Batts Neck Road on the east side of the house to make a circle in front of the house before continuing further back on the property. Three large deciduous trees are located in the center of this circle. Agricultural fields fill the area to the east, across Deer Run Lane, and a county recreational park is situated to the south, on land historically associated with the farm. The farm and the park are now separated by a wood, post-and-rail fence. A wood stockade fence encloses the entire rear of the house, running from the northeast corner of the main block to the southwest corner of the rear ell.

From the exterior, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm presents a typical I-house form. It has a more-or-less symmetrical five-bay façade organized around a central entry, a single-pile main block, and interior end chimneys at both ends of the main block, as well as at the rear of the ell. A two-story rear ell that appears to be contemporaneous with the main block extends from the south elevation. The building sits upon a brick pier foundation. The house is vacant, and in severely deteriorated condition. Currently clad in wood shingles, its original wood weatherboard is visible where shingles are missing. It has a side-gable roof, with a rear ell, and a centered gable ornamenting the façade. The roof is clad with asphalt shingles that, like the siding, are missing in spots, with wood shingles visible underneath. Nearly all of the original windows are missing. While some window openings are blank, most have been filled with replacement, one-over-one, wood, double-hung windows. All of the windows have wood surrounds with projecting sills and lintels; the lintels are square-edged, but the sills are notched into the window posts. The boxed, wood cornice, complete with cymatium, marks the roofline, and the gable ends feature cornice returns. A vacant, single, segment-topped window opening occupies the centered front gable. The front entry has a surround matching the window surrounds, but its door has been replaced by one made of plywood. The main block's westernmost chimney is broken off above the roofline, as is the one in the rear ell. The main block's easternmost chimney, while in poor condition, is mostly intact and still possesses its original corbelled cap. On the west end of the façade, the first and second story windows do not align with each other.

The farmhouse's west elevation is comprised of the two-bay main block, and the two-bay rear ell. Its details conform to those found on the house's façade, with the one exception being that the gable is occupied by two paired windows that match the single window in the centered, front gable. The south elevation of the rear ell is two bays long, while the south elevation of the main block has three bays. The ell's rear gable is also occupied by a pair of segment-topped windows. A first-story doorway occupies the westernmost bay of the main block's south elevation. Its surround is still in place, but a replacement, two-light-over-two-panel, wood door has been inserted into the opening. A small wood deck connects this doorway with another one in the innermost bay of the ell's east elevation. This doorway has been crudely widened; its original surround is present on the northernmost end, but has been cut away on the southernmost end. A plywood door fills the opening. A window opening occupies the other first story bay, while a single window is centered in the second story. The east elevation of the main block is devoid of openings, aside from the paired segmental-topped windows in the gable.

There is some evidence that the current appearance of Kirwan's Eareckson Farm is the result of more than one construction campaign. Just west of the façade entry, a wood cornerboard is visible underneath the wood shingles. Two side-by-side, brick piers in the same location give further evidence of separate framing in the eastern and western halves of the house. The wood sills in both halves appear to be hewn, although those in the western section are less weathered. This evidence suggests that the eastern half may be the older of the two sections, and that the house was expanded and/or remodeled late in the nineteenth century.

Summary Statement of Significance

Notwithstanding its state of disrepair, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm is a typical Queen Anne's County farmhouse from the second half of the nineteenth century, and it illustrates the prevalence of tenant farming in the county in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Occupied by a tenant farmer as early as 1860, Kirwan's Eareckson Farm continued to be used as a tenant farm through the early twentieth century. For most of the period between 1865 and 1930, half of more than half of the farmers in Queen Anne's County did not own the land they worked.

Historical Narrative

Benjamin Winchester Eareckson (1803-1867) appears to have been a substantial landowner and farmer on Kent Island, and was likely responsible for the first construction at Kirwan's Eareckson Farm.¹ He owned at least two farms: this one, and Eareckson's Prospect (Legg-Eareckson Farm, QA-205), about half a mile north on Batt's Neck.² He made his residence at Eareckson's Prospect, however, which he inherited upon the death of his father, John Eareckson, in 1826.³ It is unclear when or how B.W. Eareckson received the land at Kirwan's Eareckson Farm. The Eareckson family had owned land in this area since the seventeenth century.⁴ It seems likely, therefore, that B.W. Eareckson received the approximately 200 acres that originally comprised Kirwan's Eareckson Farm as an inheritance.⁵

Certainly no later than 1860, Eareckson operated Kirwan's Eareckson Farm as a tenant property, with a farmer named James Hoxter occupying the property. Tenant farming was common in Queen Anne's County from the mid-nineteenth century through the early twentieth century. After the Civil War ended in 1865, many of the large plantations of antebellum Queen Anne's County were subdivided into smaller farms or leased to tenants. As a result, new farm complexes and tenant houses were erected throughout the

² An 1866 map of Queen Anne's County notes that Eareckson owned both locations. J. G. Strong's Map of Queen Anne's County (n.p.: J.G. Strong, 1866). An 1877 map indicates that his widow owned the two properties. An Illustrated Atlas of Kent and Queen Anne Counties, MD (Philadelphia: Lake, Griffing & Stevenson, 1877).

³ See Chain of Title, Continuation Sheet 8-2, for this all subsequent deed references.

⁴ The first Eareckson in Queen Anne's County, John Erickson (alternate: Johan Erickson) arrived in Maryland in 1651, and, in 1658, received a land grant on Batt's Neck. See Legg-Eareckson Farm, QA-205. According to the MIHP Form for Stinton, it is the oldest positively dated house in Queen Anne's county, with a construction date of 1722. It is located about one-and-one-half miles east of Kirwan's Eareckson Farm. See Stinton, Old Point, QA-273

⁵ According to the MIHP Form for the Legg-Eareckson Farm, QA-205, B.W. Eareckson also seems to have owned Friendship, QA-163 (NR: 94000727), inheriting it through the Winchester family.

⁶ In the 1850 census, the property does not seem to be occupied. 1850 U.S. Population Census, Queen Anne's County, Maryland, 4th Election District, Page No. 227v. By the time of the 1860 census, however, James Hoxter lived on-site, with family members, servants, and laborers. 1860 U.S. Population Census, Queen Anne's County, Maryland, 4th Election District, Broad Creek, Page No. 3.

At the time of the survey, the owner denied entry to the interior because he deemed it unsafe. He did state, however, that he used the house as a workshop for many years, and had removed or altered the vast majority of the interior finishes. These alterations included removing the plaster, and reorienting the stair. In addition, he stated that the windows were removed for use in another house, located on Benton Pleasure Road on Cox Neck, Kent Island.

Secondary Resources (buildings, sites, structures, objects)

A circa-1940 machine shed sits to the northeast of the house. It is a two-bay, wood-frame structure, clad with standing-seam metal siding. Its side-gabled roof is also clad with standing-seam metal. The shed sits upon a concrete-block pier foundation. Its vehicle bay, located at the west end, is open, while the eastern doorway contains a replacement, fifteen-panel, wood door.

A circa-1985, one-story ranch house sits immediately to the west-northwest of the farmhouse. It is a frame structure, clad with vinyl siding, with a side-gabled roof sheathed in asphalt shingles. An oversized, one-story, metal, prefabricated garage is situated to the north of this house, and a one-story, prefabricated, metal shed sits to its southwest.

county. For most of the period between 1865 and 1930, half of more than half of the farmers in Queen Anne's County did not own the land they worked. The majority of these tenant farmers, including James Hoxter, were white.

In B.W. Eareckson's 1864 will, he bequeathed the farm to his wife, Elizabeth Goodhand Eareckson (died circa 1880; née Elizabeth White), until her death, at which time the property was to pass to his nephew, James Benjamin Bright (ca. 1845-1913). The portion of the will that describes Kirwan's Eareckson Farm mentions its tenant, James Hoxter, by name. From architectural evidence (See Section 7), it seems that the house that Hoxter occupied is a portion of the current structure.

James B. Bright inherited Kirwan's Eareckson Farm circa 1880, and continued to operate it as a tenant farm; the 1914 deed of sale between the executors of James Bright's estate and Joseph Carter mentions the tenant, J.C. Paca, by name. Bright is likely responsible for expanding and Victorianizing the residence, given that he owned it during the time period that it seems to have occurred, and he likely upgraded a nearby property in a similar manner. Bright's 1911 codicil to his 1909 will instructed his heirs to sell Kirwan's Eareckson Farm upon his death to satisfy debts. In 1914, therefore, Bright's heirs sold the farm to Joseph Carter, who immediately sold it to James E. Kirwan.

James E. Kirwan (1848-1938) was a prominent resident of Kent Island and likely leased the farm to tenants. A former oyster boat captain, he operated and lived above his store on Crab Alley Neck (QA-550, James E. Kirwan House and Store) until his death. He was elected to the Maryland State Senate as a Democrat in 1900 and 1904. Kirwan's heirs sold Kirwan's Eareckson Farm to Oscar M. Legg and his wife Florence in 1938. Like the majority of the prior owners, Oscar Legg was a farmer. It is unclear whether the Leggs lived at Kirwan's Eareckson Farm, or whether it continued to be tenanted. The property stayed in the Legg family until 1980.

⁸ In 1895, Bright bought Legg's Dependence (William E. Porter Farm, QA-206), and owned it until 1901, when he sold it to William E.H. Porter. The MIHP form for the William Porter Farm identifies Bright as the likely author of that house's Victorianization.
